BULLYING

Introduction:

Every day, in practically every school in the world, many students suffer some form of physical or moral aggression, being fat, wearing glasses with thick lenses, or simply spending a few hours more than other students.

According to a survey conducted in Rio de Janeiro by Abrapia, an association focused on children and adolescents, 40% of respondents suffer from bully. This phenomenon, which began to be observed in the 1970s, comprehends in all ways how aggressive and repeated attitudes occur without obvious motivation.

Bullying at school:

School bullying has been reported more and more, the forms of aggression among students are the most diverse, such as jerks, kicks and insults. It also affects health and leads to the development of diseases such as bulimia and anorexia, besides being a determining factor in the decision to commit suicide.

How to identify victim and offender:

Depression, low self-esteem, anxiety, abandonment of studies, is some of the more usual characteristics of the victims. The aggressor, he always thinks he is better than others, needs to reduce someone to feel better, take advantage of the victim's fragility to blackmail, and manipulate the people around him.

Solutions:

- How to prevent the problem in school:

Schools should invest in prevention and encourage open discussion with all actors on the school scene, including parents and students.

- How the family can help:

- Always be open to listening and talking to your children.
- Keep an eye on the sudden changes in behavior.
- Discuss the student's deficiency with everyone in his or her presence.
- Adapt the routine to facilitate learning whenever necessary.

Treating the consequence and preventing the cause:

It is important to reinforce that the victim should not be ashamed or silent. Encouraging school and family support is essential, even bringing the case to the police. Only with this attitude can we prevent more young people from losing their lives or continue to suffer from this type of violence.
